Ticket refund in the event view

- The refund operation can be initiated by clicking the 'Start refund' button.
 - If the user has the 'Start refund from the venue map' privileges, there are two options for ticket refund: 'Refund tickets by ID or 'Start refund from the venue map'.

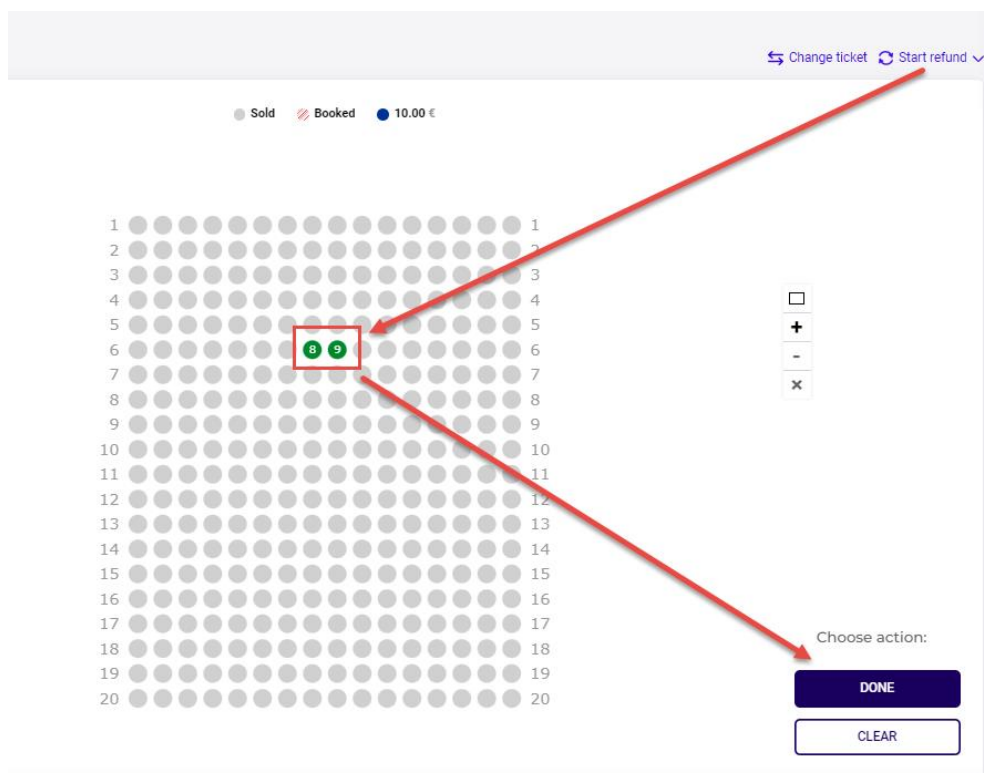

Refund based on ticket ID

If the user does not have the privileges to buy tickets back based on the venue map, refund is possible based on the ticket ID.

- If the customer has 1 ticket, the ticket ID must be entered into the left ticket ID field.
- If the customer has 2 or more tickets, the ticket IDs should be observed and entered based on the sequence of numbers. The lower ticket ID should be entered into the left and the higher ID number into the right field.
- If the ID numbers are not sequential, the refund operations must be performed as separate transactions.

Ticket refund from the venue map

A user with the privilege 'Start refund from the venue map' can return tickets directly on the venue map by selecting 'Start refund from the venue map'.

- Tickets can be selected one by one or in bulk for refund.
- When the tickets to be returned have been selected from the venue map, the user can click the 'Done' button and a regular refunding transaction is initiated.
- The 'Clear' button cancels the entire selection, but the user will remain in the same view.
- If the 'Done' button is clicked without selecting any seats, the user will be taken from the refund view back to the initial view of the event.

Sales comparison by period

This is a summarised report of the sales of the events of the promoter, which includes the main current information.

Total sales and an overview of sales channels can be viewed based on three different periods: the current day, current week, and current month.

- If a specific period is selected in the 'Total sales' graph, this period can be compared to the same period in the past under the graph. For example, if 'today' is chosen, it is compared to the day before, or if the current week is selected, it is compared to the previous week.

In the comparison of sales channels, the sales of the organiser are separated from the sales of the ticket vendor.

- The sales can be compared by total amounts or the number of tickets.
- In the event of moving to a specific point on the graph line, the exact number of tickets is displayed.

The sales status graph displays the sales trend of an event or show in the selected period.

- Each data point expresses the number of tickets sold, booked, or issued at the specific point in time.
- The period can be changed by using the buttons on the top right corner. The period changes depending on how long the event has been on sale.

The list of upcoming events includes the events of the promoter, which provides a simple overview of the tickets issued as at the current day, as well as the total amount versus all tickets on sale.

- The list begins with the event with the closest beginning time.
- The list includes the status of ticket sales based on the previously selected period.

The ticket sales heat map of the past 30 days provides a good visual overview of the tickets issued during the sales period.

- In the upper right corner of the graph is the legend, which visually describes the changes in the sales pace.
 - For example, the graph below shows that the sales gathered a lot of pace on 17 October with over 500 tickets sold.
